When Curb Brokers Get Into Action Says the Man Under Arrest at Phil She Slaps Them for Being

Shortly before noon to-day a woman bowed with age was seen walking down Wall street toward Broad. Evidently to preserve her shoes, as New York City in connection with mur carried them over her shoulder, der of William McMahon, and who was walking in her stocking feet. When she reached the office of Drexel, Morgan & Co. a crowd of messenger boys, employed by brokers and bankers in the neighborhood, commenced to laugh and jeer at her. She resented their attention by sundry slaps at them, and the boys desisted. She then walked slowly down Broad street.

As she neared the crowd of curb brokers some stock either suddenly deprediated or increased in value, as a shout went up from the excited buyers and sellers. The old woman thought the men were shouting at her and again resented the action. Pushing her way angrily into the crowd of men, she attacked them as she had the boys. But resented the action. Husband of the Woman Whose Body Was Found in Sewer Confesses to the Mount Vernon Police that He Murdered Her and Then Tied Shoe Lace Around Her Throat,

"YES, I KILLED HER," THE PRISONER CALMLY ANNOUNCES.

"She Worried Me to Death and Made a Mistake Marrying Me," He Continued to the Police-Complete Confession to Be Presented at the Inquest To-Night.

Chief of Police Foley, of Mount Vernon, announced this afternoon that he mystery surrounding the murder of Gussie Ebelt has been cleared up, and said that her husband, Martin Ebelt, had weakened and made a con-

"You can say," said the Chief, "that the police have completed their case and that we know all. Everything concerning the crime has been revealed and will be made public at the inquest which will be finished

Coroner Weisendanger hurriedly left for White Plains to see Assistant District Attorney Fred Weeks.

The confession was made in the private office of Chief Foley to the Yes, I killed my wife."

In the examination Ebelt was informed that his father and mother and brother had denied his story that he had spent Friday and Saturday nights at his home, and this confused him. He became wearied with the questions, and then told how he had murdered his wife of a year.

"Why did you kill her?" the Coroner asked.

KILLED HER TO END WORRY.

"Because she worried me to death. We were constantly quarrelling and in trouble," continued Ebelt, in supplementing his confession. "My wife told her sister that I was not able to support her properly, and, besides, she had me arrested several times for non-support. I was tired of it all. She made a mistake in marrying me." Ebelt said that he adopted the ruse of telling his wife that he had a position for her, and in this way lured her to Sixth street, where the sewer

Chief of Police Foley and his men, it is said, are seeking another woman with whom Ebelt was very friendly, and it is thought this woman was the main cause of the crime.

It was not expected after Ebelt had been taken to the Morgue that he do all the other men, that our team is would confess. He showed the most stolid indifference there and smoke a cigarette while he gazed on the face of the strangled woman.

But after he was taken back to Police Headquarters and plied with questions his nerve gave out. When Ebelt was taken to the Morgue he calmly, and with a stolidly unconcerned expression, gazed upon the face of the strangled woman. No

"Wonderful nerve that man has," said the Coroner. When asked if he would like to see his wife's body he said:

a tear appeared in his eyes, nor was there a tremor of his lips.

"Sure. I'll go with you." IDENTIFIES WIFE'S BODY.

In company with Chief Foley and the Coroner he walked into the Morgue complacently smoking a cigarette. He stood close by the dead woman's head and looked down unmoved upon the body. He breathed naturally and did not appear nervous in the least.

"Is that your wife?" the Chief asked. "Yes, that's her," was his only reply.

"How do you know?" "By her afce," he answered. Then Ebelt was taken back to police headquarters, where he confessed. The strangler said his plan was to choke the woman to death when he got her into the woods and then to throw her body into the sewer. He carried out his scheme of murder exactly as planned. After he had choked the woman with his hands so that she was unconscious he tied a shoelace so tightly that the string cut into the flesh. He threw the body into the sewer, believing it would be washed into East Chester Creek and that the crime would never be discovered. There was not enough water
